Air Force help transport essentials to Northern civilians

At the close of the war, nearly 300,000 civilians had fled the LTTE and reached government lines. They urgently needed essential goods such as dry rations, clothing, and other things. The public responded with generosity and provided much of these goods.

Air Force personnel not only helped collect the donated items, but helped load them into planes and transport it to North. Here Air Force personnel in Colombo in one such operation.
